The Government has taken up programmes under Basic Minimum Services to provide safe drinking water in rural and urban areas, 100 per cent coverage in primary health care facilities, public housing, supplementry nutrition via extension of mid-day meal programmes in primary schools, provision of connectivity to all unconnected villages and habitations and Public Distribution System to provide food security to people below poverty line. From the year 2000-01, a new initiative in the form of Pradhan Mantri Gramodaya Yojana (PMGY) has been introduced which essentially builds on the components of BMS and re-orients into a project mode to give greater focus in providing basic services to the people. The PMGY would cover rural housing, rural drinking water, primary health, elementary education and rural roads.

Further, various enactments and statutory provisions provide safeguards to people engaged in formal and non-formal economic activities including those below poverty line.

(c) Education has been given a very high priority in the Ninth Plan. Universalisation of elementary education, achievement of adult literacy, raising the quality of education at all levels, upliftment of educational status of disadvantaged groups including girls and disabled childern and vocationalisation of education have been accorded a place of prominence. The Primary Health Care Infrastructure to provide health care to the people forms part of the Special Action Plan for the Ninth Plan Period. In addition, initiatives to control specific diseases which show a higher inciudence in below poverty line population have also been taken. The Public Distribution System has been an important instrument of Government Policy for ensuring availability of food grains at affordable prices to the people. The people living below poverty line are covered under the Targeted Public Distribution System which ensures a minimum of 10 kg. of food grains per month at specially subsidised prices.
